

PLEA FOR THE FARM.

Not a day passes by but what we meet upon our streets, and in travels noble sons of farmers from all parts of the country. It is indeed pitiful, and the question arises, what occasions it? The first inclination of our American boys after they have arrived at the age of maturity is to go to some great city and try and make a living by some other means than by agriculture. This has been so for years, even so before the profits of farming were taken away.

Put an advertisement in a paper for a man and his wife to go to the country to a farm, with the offer of fair wages, and you will never get a reply from an American born man or woman. Put the same ad in the paper for a bookkeeper at low wages, and there will be twenty-five applications for the position inside of three hours after the paper has been issued. All this shows that there is something wrong in the education of our people. And the fact is that the native lands of the country are passing from the ownership of families that settled there, and going into the hands of foreigners. Again, go where there is a veneration for the old country homes, that fact will be an evidence that the old stamina of the Nation has begun to decline. If men and women only knew how much of comfort, how much of peace, goes with the ownership of a farm, how much pleasure there is in improving and cultivating a farm, it seems as though it would change the whole spirit of the people, and the ambition of the people would not be to get a clerkship in the city but to get a few acres of land in the country. This feeling ought to be more pronounced here in the West, because here in our mining country the cultivation of our soil is made more profitable than in any other spot in America, except California, and that State makes her profits off something that will not grow in a colder state.

The memory of the old home, the old farm, has kept more boys from going to the dogs in later life where trouble came to them, than all else besides. When tempted they have always thought of where they were born, have thought of their mothers either there or gone beyond, and they shrink from doing anything which, if that mother in this world, or the other, would give her pain to know, and when men give up the love of the farm, when they cease to appreciate the manhood which comes from a training on a farm, then that people, we do not care how strong the stock may be, has begun to decline. This is so important, that if for no other reason than to reawaken the love of the farm which would come if some profits could be realized from the work there, it ought to cause Congress to make such an adjustment of the finances of the country as would leave the tiller of the soil a little profit for his work.

The production of beet sugar this year has been greatly overestimated. According to the calculations of Herr Lecht it will fall 100,000 tons short of the original estimate. The same authority claims that the cane sugar product will fall about 39,000 tons short. As a consequence sugar stiffened in price but not enough to make itself felt by the consumer in this country, who thanks to the McKinley bill gets his sweets very cheaply nowadays.—The Weekly.

We are not inclined to think the advice of C. P. Huntington to capitalists who are frequently requested to disgorge a million or so to cranks is good. Now for instance suppose Mr. Huntington was ejecting Mr. Wilson from the office of Russell Sage, and so doing kicked the bag containing the dynamite, he might also have become a sage but alas, too late. The best plan is to humor a crank and thus keep him quiet until some other relief arrives.

Russell Sage's narrow escape from death, will leave a good many openings for alleged jokes from the wits of the day. All we can say is that if a man were to threaten us with sudden extinction if we refused to give him a million dollars, we would give him the money just to save the trouble.

Summer still remains on our hill-sides and valleys. This cold snap stays with us.

A BIG BUSINESS.

The growth and present size of the great retail business of Weinstein, Lubin, & Co., Sacramento, shows on the face that it possesses a distinct character of its own. It has done much to introduce many important reforms in storekeeping, which have been widely copied. There are people who have never heard of the big establishment, but who, through its silent influence, are being served by local dealers better than they otherwise would be.

It has done more than any other ten stores to give the "One Price System" firm and substantial footing on the Pacific Coast.

It has shown people living in small towns that they can deal through the mails with as much security as if they bought in person.

It has, by constantly raising its own standard of qualities, had an influence in raising the standard everywhere. The average grade of goods kept upon the Coast grows better each year.

It has been prominent in bringing west as stylish and desirable goods as are kept by merchants in New York, Philadelphia, or Chicago. Indeed, the manufacturers who supply them supply it. The goods are the same; and the Sacramento prices, while never higher, are sometimes considerably less. This is explained by the fact that the cost of conducting business in large Eastern cities is far greater than in the Capital City, the extra expense of overland freight being but a comparatively small item.

It has made it possible for out-of-town people to enjoy quite as satisfactory shopping facilities as do those living in large cities.

There is no desire on the part of the firm to take any special credit for whatever influence for good the house may have exerted. They have sought simply to build up a business on fair and just principles; to buy and sell as low as they can; to deal as far as possible only in the very best goods; and neither to fear nor favor any one, but to treat every customer as they would their most favored friend.

Whatever of success has come, they attribute it to the faithful carrying out of these aims and principles.
